Principled

Principled describes a person in society who consistently behaves in an honest, moral, ethical manner, and employ right-thinking.

When a person's decision or stance in his or her behavior is called principled, it means it is deeply rooted in strong personal values or objectively defined standards of right and wrong – not convenience or personal gains..

It is characterized by being

- Honest and fair: Always telling the truth and treating others with justice.
- Consistent: Following personal values even when it is hard or unpopular.
- Responsible: Taking ownership of personal actions and choices.
- Integrity and Honesty: Acting truthfully and keeping your word, even when no one is watching.
- Fairness and Justice: Treating others equitably and respecting the dignity of individuals and groups.
- Accountability: Taking full responsibility for your actions and the consequences that follow them.
- Consistency: Standing by your core convictions during difficult times or under social pressure.